As we all know, sooner or later your luck will run out. Most employers have a level of frustration when it comes to a safety program.

They see that the frequency and severity has been low over the past few years, so they want to believe the program is working.

Then, all of a sudden, a serious claim occurs, followed by a frequency of back injuries.

Management is running down the hallways trying to figure out what is going on.

Then accounting tells you that the company's workers compensation premium just took a big increase because the experience modification jumped off the scale and the state is raising the rates per $100.00 of payroll for workers compensation (which is the case in California for 2013).

None of us wait for the engine in our cars and trucks to burn up from lack of oil. We frequently check the oil to prevent this costly mistake.

So why not have a "service check" on your safety program?

It makes perfect sense to have an independent "mock OSHA Audit" done by an objective outsider.

You need someone who has been through a number of formal and informal OSHA audits, so he or she knows what OSHA is looking for and has ideas in mind for how to fix any problems.

Let RMA help you in creating a safety program that saves you money, rather than costs you in penalties.

Through mock OSHA audits and audits of property and casualty exposures, RMA can put your company on track to have a successful safety program.
